

Follow Rebecca

Rebecca Officer • Hi Vinay

This sounds like you're trying to estimate the docs output for the whole project by yourself, before it starts. That's not how scrum works. Talk to the scrum master about how the team is estimating the project and follow their lead.

The size of a story point varies drastically from team to team. If you're joining an existing scrum team, you could look at what they've recently produced and guess how long each story point would have taken you to document. That's the best starting point I can think of. If it's a new team, just do your best guess and then record how long things actually took. You'll get better with time.

Click here to communicate with a fellow Group member -- about anything.

Inputs AND reviews are slow and email-based, I think scrum is broken where you're working. What are these meetings? Are you co-located with the engineers? Can you get info and reviews by talking to people? How many scrum teams are you supporting?

20 days ago • Like • Reply privately • Flag as inappropriate

1